Item 4 – General debate on national experience in population matters:
population distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development

Thank you Mr. Chairperson. It is an honour for me to address this assembly today. Let me begin by congratulating you and your colleagues in the Bureau on your election.

Canada will work to maintain a balanced and constructive role on the issues being addressed by the Commission on Population and Development this session. Population distribution, urbanization, internal migration and development are part of a complex global phenomenon that presents challenges and opportunities. It has important demographic, economic, environmental and social Canada continues to support initiatives that reinforce and focus on commitments made at the ICPD as well as the Beijing Conference on women and development and the UN High Level Meeting on HIV/AIDS. The carefully negotiated principles and goals of the programs of action that emerged from these conferences remain relevant today as important frameworks for achieving international poverty reduction and development goals. The implementation of those commitments will contribute to achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

responsive to the needs of our citizens and to the context in which they live. Our international approaches are informed by our domestic experience.

Over the past ten years, the Government of Canada has made progress in removing socio-economic barriers for our urban Aboriginal population by working through partnerships with Aboriginal communities, provincial and municipal governments and other stakeholders under the Urban Aboriginal Strategy.
