Regional Policy

The regional policy is a key element of the EU's economic and social policy. It aims to reduce regional disparities and promote sustainable growth in all regions. The policy is implemented through the Regional Development Fund (ERDF) and the Regional Development Fund (ERDF). The ERDF provides financial support to regions with a low GDP per capita, to help them to improve their infrastructure, to create jobs, and to promote sustainable development. The ERDF also supports the development of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) and the promotion of research and innovation. The ERDF also supports the development of the rural areas and the promotion of sustainable agriculture. The ERDF also supports the development of the coastal areas and the promotion of sustainable tourism. The ERDF also supports the development of the urban areas and the promotion of sustainable housing. The ERDF also supports the development of the transport infrastructure and the promotion of sustainable transport. The ERDF also supports the development of the energy infrastructure and the promotion of sustainable energy. The ERDF also supports the development of the social infrastructure and the promotion of sustainable social services. The ERDF also supports the development of the cultural infrastructure and the promotion of sustainable culture.
