

Editing of resolutions at the United Nations

Presentation for the information of delegations

Introduction

The Editing Section edits all United Nations documents, including draft resolutions, to make them clear, accurate, consistent, grammatically correct, in conformity with United Nations editorial standards and translatable into the other five official languages. All draft resolutions are normally edited, translated, formatted, proofread and reproduced by DGACM within 48 hours of submission. With such a short turnaround time it is essential that the editor have the contact information of the main sponsor or facilitator so that any questions can be cleared up quickly.

Delegates should also be aware that when they are preparing a draft resolution that is based on a previous resolution, they should download the final version of the adopted text (usually available under the symbol A/RES/xx/xx) and use it as the basis for the new resolution. This not only saves precious processing time, but also improves accuracy.

After adoption, resolutions and decisions undergo final editing to ensure concordance in all six languages. This is the process by which differences in meanings among the language versions are corrected. Such differences are usually the result of ambiguity in the original language version. The editors recognize that “constructive ambiguity” is sometimes intentionally used to facilitate agreement on a sensitive text. In consultation with the facilitator/sponsor, editors can help to ensure that the message is identical in all the languages while preserving the desired level of vagueness. At the concordance stage, changes made by delegates at the time of adoption of the resolution are incorporated in the final text and source references (footnotes) are added, deleted or updated as needed.

Editors will not make changes that alter meaning. Whenever a language issue touches on a substantive matter, the editor will consult with the drafter or facilitator. It is crucial for the editors to be informed of any passages that have been closely negotiated or are otherwise highly sensitive.

Why is it important for resolutions to be edited?

Once adopted, these important international instruments belong to the world. Many equally authentic resolutions in all six languages. In addition to ensuring the highest quality of resolutions, editors play a key role as coordinators because, by solving problems in the original language version, one editor saves five translators from having to independently solve the same problems.

It is interesting to note that throughout the world, legal texts are often edited following negotiation and adoption. For example, there was an article in The New York Times about the revision of United States Supreme Court decisions after issuance (link to article).

Structure of resolutions

Paragraphs

Resolutions are essentially one long sentence. There are normally three elements in a resolution: the name of the organ, the preamble and the operative part.

Preambular paragraphs are not numbered. They serve to present the background to the action part of the resolution. Preambular paragraphs must begin with a verb in the form of a present, past or perfect participle or an adjective in italics. Examples of the types of verbs and adjectives used in preambular paragraphs are provided in the annex.

Operative paragraphs are numbered. They express the opinions of Member States and contain the action that they are agreeing to take. Operative paragraphs must begin with an action verb. Examples are provided in the annex.

When the opening verb of a paragraph is repeated in the following paragraph, the word also is used. If the verb is repeated a second time in succession, the word further is used. Also and further are placed after the verb in the preamble and before the verb in the operative part.

Subparagraphs

Subparagraphs are lettered (a), (b), (c). Each subparagraph begins with a capital letter. All of the subparagraphs in a paragraph must have a similar syntactical structure. The following example from resolution 66/167 shows proper subparagraphs:

6. Calls upon all States:
 - (a) To take effective measures to ensure...
 - (b) To foster religious freedom and pluralism...
 - (c) To encourage the representation and meaningful participation of...
 - (d) To make a strong effort to...

Another good example, from resolution 66/94:

10. Reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with technical cooperation and assistance in the field of international trade law reform and development, and in this connection:

- (a) Welcomes the initiatives of the Commission...
- (b) Expresses its appreciation to the Commission...
- (c) Takes note with interest of the comprehensive approach...
- (d) Expresses its appreciation to the Governments...

Examples of changes that editors make to draft resolutions

Editors will check and correct titles and facts (such as dates); correct grammar and syntax; correct, add or delete footnotes where necessary; and make minor adjustments to style to bring the text into line with United Nations editorial standards and practice and to render the text translatable. The following is a list of common corrections that are made by editors:

Titles of bodies, meetings, conventions, etc., will be checked and corrected if necessary. The full title will be used at first mention in both the preamble and the operative part. Thereafter a shortened version of the title may be used. The following is an example from resolution 67/184:

- 2. Notes the progress made thus far in the preparations for the Thirteenth United Nations Congress on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;
- 3. Decides that the duration of the Thirteenth Congress should not exceed eight days;

Acronyms are not used in resolutions and will be spelled out in full the first time they occur in both the preamble and the operative part. Thereafter a shortened ver

Personification. A resolution or report does not decide/recommend/launch/convene/extend a mandate, etc.; it is the author or body adopting the resolution or report who takes the action. The editors will correct personification [Example: “General Assembly resolution 65/14 requested the Secretary-General to report...” will be changed to read “The General Assembly, in its resolution 65/14, requested the Secretary-General to report...”]

Takes note/notes. In general, “takes note” is used when the object is a report, statement or decision.

Editorial helpdesk and other resources

Editors are available to offer assistance and advice. Delegates are encouraged to contact the Editing Section if they have an editorial or language question on a draft resolution:

editingny@un.org

(212) 963-2528

Other resources:

United Nations Editorial Manual Online (dd.dgacm.org/editorialmanual/)

UNTERM (unterportal.un.org)

Official Document System (ods.un.org)

