Translated from Spanish

Contribution to the work of the Sixth Commete on the draft convention on crimes against humanity

- 1. Spain welcomes the draft articles prepatrby the International Law Commission on prevention and punishment of crimes against handity and acknowledges the constructive discussions held in the Six@committee of the General Assembly. The draft articles represent a good opportunity to negotiate new convention with the naiof preventing and punishing crimes against humanity. Unlike the crime of negotiate or war crimes, for which there is a dedicated convention, crimes against humanity are not regulated by any international convention. Through the current exercise, the specution of this atrocity crime will be strengthened.
- 2. The draft articles contain significant positivelements, including the definition of these crimes, as well as the obligation of Statespitevent and punish them, ensure that they are offences under national law and extraditeprosecute the alleged offenders.
- 3. Spain is pleased that the definition of crimesiast humanity included in the draft articles is in line with that set forth in the Rome Statutteis essential to maintain uniformity in the establishment of criminality under international law, thus avoting the fragmentation thereof. The Rome Statute represented a msaign forward in the codification of atrocity crimes; that progress ends to be preserved.
- 4. However, international criminal law mustsal be developed and updated in line with the realities that it is itended to regulate. Twenty-five years after the adopt the Statute, the understanding of sexual and noter-based crimes has evolved there is now increased awareness about time portance of prosecuting such crimes.
- 5. Spain considers that the draftiales provide a uniquepportunity to reflect such progress in international criminal law. Wesupport the integration of a note perspective in the draft
