

The dialogues in this CSD-18 session clearly highlight the neglect of natural resources, rural areas, and consequently farmers, women, and indigenous peoples on the one side and wasteful ways on the other. They continue to be barriers for quenching hunger, thirst, and decent quality of life for all people of the world. It is urgent now to take decisions and implement them to put “development” on a different-trajectory that will keep us at sustainable levels everywhere in the world.