Developed countries should meet their ODA commitments to LDCs to increase available finance and to prevent major regression in gender equality and other development goals. Governments should create fiscal space through progressive tax policies and stemming illicit finance flows.

Greater coherence between macroeconomic policies and gender equality outcomes requires policies to broaden fiscal space necessary to increase investment in gender-responsive policies, public services and social protection systems.

Governments should prioritize increasing public investments in infrastructure, public services and social protection that aim at reducing and redistributing the unpaid care and domestic work of women and girls and promote sustainable livelihoods and ecological integrity.

The knowledge and capacity must be strengthened for governments to carry out genderresponsive planning as well as costing and budgeting processes to ensure allocation of adequate