Building Strong Institutions and Capacity Building

FADIAH ACHMADI

- Governance is a that feeds on the lessons learned within a policy framework (Dolowitz and Marsh, 2000)
- Public sector reform is a major driver of policy in developing countries and those in transition. Market liberalization, privatization and decentralization each characterizes the reform process.
- Reforms in transport sector governance institutions are needed in most developing

The following ground works need to be done to have sufficient capacity to develop a pipeline of bankable infrastructure projects to meet investors' requirements:

- Long-term holistic national transport infrastructure plan, to secure project pipelines
- Increase capacity to develop feasibility studies
- Ensure economic, political & social stability and extend fiscal & non-fiscal incentives
- If applicable, develop PPP laws involving
 - o creation of a common regulatory framework to ensure that legal environment is attractive for investors
 - o Government's commitments and risk transfer mechanisms
