THE

56TH SESSION OF THE COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN (CSW)

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 2012
UN HEADQUARTERS, NEW YORK

Chairperson,
Your Excellencies,
Distinguished Delegates,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I take this opportunity to congratulate you on your election as Chairperson of the 56th Session of the Commission on the Status of Women, and to assure you of our support during this Session.

My delegation aligns itself with the statement by the distinguished representative of Algeria on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, as well as the statement by the distinguished representative of Tunisia on behalf of the African Group.

Chairperson,

Allow me to highlight some specific significative issues as well as challenges faced in our efforts to translate the theme of women in respect to the priority theme:

Gender equality, non-discrimination, protection of the marginalised including persons living with disabilities and sustainable development principles of the Kenya Constitution. The Constitution has reiterated a new era that empowers women and the fight against poverty and hunger. The Bill of Rights provides for the right to equal treatment of women and men in economic, social and political spheres. Theulation strategy, as spelt out in our Constitution aims at promoting socio and economic development and will not only guarantee all women's access to critical services but also promote equitable sharing of resources throughout Kenya.

Chairperson,

Kenya has progressively, funded and is enforcing relevant laws which protect the rights of women and contribute towards women's empowerment. The Employment Act, of 2007 prohibits discrimination and harassment of employees on the basis of sex. Further, Kenya is formulating new laws that will significantly transform women's access to land control over land, including through reform bills; The Marriage Bill, 2022; Matrimonial Property Bill, 2022. In order to address the intersection of HIV/AIDS and gender based violence and its devastating impact of rural women's health and well-being we have the Female Genital Mutilation Act, 2011 and Domestic Violence Act, 2005 and its companion, the Family Protection Act, 2012.

Chairperson,

The legal and policy frameworks have been further strengthened with the establishment of new independent Constitutional institutions. These are:

- The Commission for the Implementation of the Constitution; to oversee the implementation of the new constitution
- Kenya Gender Equality Commission; the oversight body monitoring gender mainstreaming in the country,
- Kenya National Human Rights Commission; the entity addressing all areas of human rights and;
- Commission on Administrative Justice; whose mandate is to investigate maladministration.

The Government is also implementing a number of policies which include:

- Vision 2030, Kenya's Development Blueprint which aims at transforming Kenya into a middle income country with equitable distribution of resources by 2030 at the ratio of 10 per cent per annum.
- National Land Policy 2009 which protects women's land rights
- National Reproductive Health Policy 2007
- Maternal and Newborn Health Roadmap 2010 to accelerate the reduction of maternal and new born morbidity and mortality
- Strategy for Revitalising Agriculture 2014-2014 – contribute to improved agriculture productivity and food security at household level for the poor

Chairperson,

Kenya's Constitution provides for a minimum household of no more than 2/3 of the members of the household to address the needs of women, the youth, persons with disabilities, orphans and other vulnerable groups. Further, women have access to devolved funds such as the Constituency Development Fund (CDF) and the Local Authority Transfer Fund (LATIF). More importantly, the Constitution provides that at least 15 per cent of the national budget will be allocated to the county government where the participation of the management of funds is assured.

The Government has created an enabling environment that has led to an increase in activity within the financial sector. This has tremendously increased the productivity of rural women in business enterprise. Further, women in the rural areas are experiencing the benefits of enhanced educational advancement in rural Kenya – particularly in the communications sector, mobile phone sector, mobile money transfer and e-banking.

Chairperson...

In 2010/2011 financial year, the Government increased allocation to the education sector by 810 per cent. This has had an increase in the number of educational institutions, improved facilities in the rural areas, and enhanced enrolment of girls and boys. Furthermore, the Government allocated Ksh 1.5 million in the current financial year 2011/2012 for the provision of sanitary towels and buckets in schools in rural areas. These in the

The National Agriculture and Livestock Extension Program (NNAEP) where women constitute 45 per cent of the beneficiaries has significantly contributed to improvement of food security and increased household incomes. The Government has also been supporting women small scale holder farmers through the provision of subsidized fertilizers and ten years as well as reviving irrigation incomes through constructing canals, reservoirs and dams for serous dry, marginal and underutilized lands. The Government has in the last two years increased its budgetary allocation to the sector in order to scale up irrigation in dry areas and marshy underutilized lands.

Chairperson...

Despite the gains and efforts made, climate change remains one of the greatest challenges to food security in Kenya. The erratic and unpredictable weather patterns compromise production, distribution and accessibility thereby elevating poverty and poor health. Despite the Constitutional ban against negative climatic practices these continue to pose a challenge to women's socio-economic productive resources, employment and property ownership thus hindering their empowerment.

The Government is alive to these challenges and will remain steadfast in its quest to empower rural women by safeguarding their rights and upholding the Constitution. As I conclude, I wish to re-affirm and assure you of Kenya's commitment to the empowerment of women in all spheres of life.

I thank you.

Kenya - building on the communication sector, mobile phone sector, money transfer and e-payment.

Challenges

In 2011/12, the average number of mobile subscriptions per 100 people increased by 0.08 per year. This is despite the number of subscribers increasing by 10% every year. This is due to the continued growth of the Government's Universal Service Fund, which is allocated to the provision of subsidies in the form of cash subsidies to those in rural areas. We expect this to grow in future.

Challenges

The Universal Service Fund is set to increase from Ksh 1.5 billion in 2012/13 to Ksh 2.5 billion in 2013/14. This will help to reduce the cost of providing services to rural areas. The challenge is to ensure that these subsidies are used effectively and efficiently. The Government has already taken steps to encourage private sector participation in the delivery of basic telecommunications services. This includes the introduction of a new regulatory framework for telecommunications providers in 2012/13, which aims to encourage competition and innovation in the sector.

Challenges

Despite the many significant improvements made in recent years, there are still challenges facing the sector. One of the main challenges is the lack of investment in infrastructure. This is particularly evident in rural areas, where connectivity is often poor. Another challenge is the high cost of providing services to rural areas. This is due to the high cost of infrastructure, such as power generation and distribution, and the low density of population in these areas. The Government is working to address these challenges through various initiatives, such as the introduction of a new regulatory framework for telecommunications providers in 2012/13, which aims to encourage competition and innovation in the sector.

If the Government is able to take advantage of these opportunities, it will remain competitive in the global market. Conversely, if it fails to do so, it may lose market share to other countries. In order to succeed, the Government must continue to invest in infrastructure, develop new technologies, and improve its regulatory framework. It must also work closely with the private sector to ensure that the benefits of telecommunications are shared by all. By doing so, Kenya can continue to build on its strengths and become a leader in the global telecommunications industry.
