HECK AGAINST DELIVERY

GENERAL ASSEMBLY, THIRD COMMITTEE
ITEM 28 (A) AND (C) ADVANCEMENT OF WOMEN
STATEMENT BY ALESSANDRA GREGG, ADVISOR

Chairperson,

From the outset, let me express our satisfaction with the new focus on the role of women. The creation of UN Women has brought about a new focus for UN women, and to a strong start, spearheading important initiatives and we look forward to working closely with UN Women's commitment to providing concrete and measurable results and its strengthened regional and country presence has the potential to improve the lives of millions of women.

Chairperson,

We have seen too often the face of discrimination and exclusion in our decision-making processes. We have seen in the recent events of the Arab Spring that women are a driving force for change.

Yet as some countries are transitioning through democratic processes that their actions initiated. Actions at grassroots level, the practices that do more to protect the rights of women to participate on equal terms in the political transition, to guarantee their right to speak their minds, and to assemble freely. The UN must support efforts to fully include poor and otherwise marginalized women in democratic processes. This General Assembly should continue to reaffirm its relevance by reflecting on events occurring today. This year's Third Committee resolution on Women and Political Participation is an opportunity for it to do so.

Almost 11 years after the adoption of Security Council resolution 1225 women continue to be under-represented as stakeholders in peace processes. Women's issues receive too little or too late attention in conflict resolution processes. Women's rights and needs are therefore often neglected. Women must be fully involved from the earliest opportunity. The women's training programme for women mediators will be a crucial step towards empowering women to participate at the decision-making level at all stages of conflict prevention and resolution. The UN must also lead by example and appoint more women to UN mediation and other transitional processes. With regard to conflict related sexual violence, Liechtenstein places high hopes in the new Monitoring and Reporting Arrangements on sexual violence in armed conflicts, as these will provide information on the scale and nature of violations, as well as information on perpetrators.

Chairperson,

Ending violence against women in all its forms continues to be a priority for Liechtenstein. Violence against women is not only marital, but also general, institutional, domestic and other forms of violence should be addressed as a matter of urgency. Not only are these violations of the rights of women, but they cause significant harm to the physical and mental health of women and constitute a major challenge for development. We fully support the Elder's initiative "Bridges not Bricks" to foster the political will to end these violations and to remind States of their obligation to protect women from all forms of violence.

Chairperson,

Impunity not only intensifies the subordination and powerlessness of the targets of violence, but perpetuates revictimization and further acts of violence. The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (ICC) has significantly advanced international law, though its recognition of sexual violence as a war crime or crime against humanity. The principle of complementarity, one of the main pillars of the ICC, enshrines the primacy of national jurisdictions. Efforts by the Team of Experts on Rule of Law to help strengthen domestic accountability mechanisms are a perfect example of this so-called "bottom-up" complementarity." Investigative, prosecutive, protective and redress measures offered to women victims of violence will have a direct effect on the prevalence rates of such violence. In 2010, justice systems often lack the required resources to prosecute perpetrators. In 2010, in 2010, mobile courts in the Democratic Republic of Congo adjudicated 100 cases, 10 of which were rape cases that resulted in 95 convictions. However, research has shown that women who are raped suggest that pervasive violations of the human rights of women are often perpetrated with impunity. Efforts to strengthen the domestic justice system must be scaled up dramatically. In addition, victims' protection and support must be ensured so they can testify freely and without fear of retaliation.

While accountability is of paramount importance, efforts to end impunity will only depend on addressing structural discrimination, including access to justice, and ensuring the protection and legal empowerment of women. Promoting legal skills and an understanding of government, especially for poor women and those living in rural areas, is essential for confidence and the full participation of women in society and political processes.

violence will have a direct effect on the prevalence rates of such violence, but formal justice systems often lack the required resources to prosecute perpetrators. A case in point is 2012 mobile courts in the Democratic Republic of Congo which adjudicated 186 cases, 136 of which were rape cases that resulted in 82 convictions. However, as the stated by recent reports, which suggest that pervasive violations of the human rights of women in the DRC continue to be perpetrated with impunity. Efforts towards strengthening the domestic justice system must be scaled up dramatically. In addition, victims' protection and support must be ensured so they can testify freely and without fear of retaliation.

While accountability is of paramount importance, efforts to end impunity will ultimately depend on addressing structural discrimination, including access to justice, and ensuring the protection and legal empowerment of women. Furthermore, legal skills and an understanding of government, especially for poor women and those living in rural areas, is key for building the confidence and the full participation of women in society and political processes.
